

Impact

Oh impact- the Nickelback of fonts. You either love it, or you hate it. This font has no serifs, and is a Sans Serif font. The descenders on this font appear to be very short as well. Also, the tittles are very close and almost appear to connect to the rest of the letters. To me, this font feels very attention-grabbing. It does not have a bold form, as it's natural aesthetic already has a bold feel to it. It seems that good places to use this font would be in a headline (of an article of some sort), a title, memes, or a custom clickbait thumbnail on a YouTube video.

Heavy Heap

This font, Heavy Heap is very interesting. There is no decision of whether each letter is capitalized or not. The only difference between a capitalized letter and a lowercase letter in this font, is that the capitalized letters are simply larger than the others. The letter "a" in this font does not have an anus (or even a true crossbar when capitalized), and the letter "j" does not have a tittle. Also, there are no true descenders either. This font feels like the letters straight out of the Hot Wheels logo. They appear to be made of fire, or something blowing violently in the wind. Good uses of this font would be on a hobby website, a fortune teller's advertisement, or hiding subliminal messages in images or videos of fire.

Black Ops One

This font is huge. It is naturally large, like "Impact", however it is also stretched out immensely. Traditionally curved features such as bowls and tails are squared off. Also, bowls and eyes are not completely closed. Black Ops One also does not have serifs. Unlike the previous two fonts mentioned, Black Ops One aesthetically has a stencil feel. Uses for this font would be the name on the side of a battleship, or in the title for a modern/futuristic competitive first person shooter game.
