Kefa- Kefa would be an exceptional font for any type of informational article. It makes me feel like what I'm reading is important. It reminds me of Times New Roman, a font commonly used for essays. But it has a bolder sense to it, which makes everything being said seem more important. Kefa is classified as a modern font because it is a bit thicker than serif.

Bradley Hand- Bradley Hand would be exceptional for anything seeming to be handwritten and cryptic. For example, if a character in a book were to be writing a letter that is meant to foreshadow an element that is supposed to affect the story later. Bradley Hand would be the perfect font, because it adds a sense of mystery while showing the imperfections of common handwriting. Bradley Hand would be a Script class of Font because of how the letters are interconnected.

Comic Sans- Comic Sans is one of the more comical fonts. It is used for lighthearted texts like valentines, comic strips, and much more. Comic Sans makes me feel stress free due to its lack of serious substance. The font is simple and resembles how some may write when writing on paper. Comic Sans would be classified as a Sans (Serif) class of font.
