Courier New

Courier News is the first font I chose. It's class that it falls is monospace. Courier News has a sleek feel to it, which the kerning is responsible for. Each letter is spaced out more from each other from other fonts we've looked at which makes it more pleasing and satisfying to look at. This font feels somewhat professional, like it belongs in a newspaper, magazine or an old 1900s ad. The way that the text is so slim and crisp compared to others make it look very serious and captivating, making the reader interested in the page from just viewing the font.

Bernard MT Condensed

Bernard MT Condensed is the second font that I choose. I feel that it's class belongs in the "slab" family. With its bold look and impacted spacing, it seems to fit into that category along with others. The kerning of this font makes the letters very close together, giving it a very intense and dramatic look. Since the spacing is so close together, it makes to fun to type! Although this font is intense, it gives a semiprofessional look. I can see this font used in a magazine as the title, maybe used in a children's novel as the title or ad on the highway, taking over the focus of the driver.

Curly MT

Curly MT is the third font I choose. This font belongs in the "decorative" class. The kerning of this font makes the letters very, very close together making it almost difficult to read. This font is very dainty and fun, making it look like how girls write in their diary. This font may seem very easy to use, it is hard to read sometimes compared to the other fonts. I can see this font used in wedding or baby shower invitations, or something girly along those lines. I can also see it used in greeting cards for spring holidays like Easter.
